The concert pianist

If you trace out the top line of this piece you'll spot its highest point in bar 5 (B flats). While this isn't an invitation to wade in with a Brahmsian allargando, do use the music's changing landscape to avoid a 'flat', monochrome feel. Experiment with a variety of speeds and dynamics – don't feel hemmed-in by the lack of markings or by the tempo suggestion. Taken too slowly, the sense of line will evaporate (and remember that the virginal had the briefest of note durations), all the delicious contrapuntal detail will lack rhythmic vitality and we may end up relying too heavily on the sustain pedal instead of our fingers. You may wish to modify the ornament at bars 4 and 16.

Repertoire

A Maske

There was comparatively little dynamic variation in the keyboard instruments of the Renaissance and Baroque periods, which is why there is none to be found in this piece. Add in a variety of dynamics and articulation for your performance.

Giles Farnaby
(1563–1640)

The musical score for 'A Maske' by Giles Farnaby is presented in three systems. Each system consists of two staves, likely representing the right and left hands of a keyboard instrument. The first system shows measures 1 through 4, the second system shows measures 3 through 4, and the third system shows measures 5 through 4. The music is written in a key with one flat (B-flat) and a 4/4 time signature. The notation includes various note values, rests, and ornaments, with some measures containing fingerings (e.g., 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 7). A large, faint watermark 'O' is visible across the center of the page.
